Hello, everyone. I'm Li Hua. Now I feel very honoured to have this opportunity to run for director of the music festival.

I'm highly qualified for this position for the following reasons. For a start, I have been good at music and my spoken communication skills are much better. Besides, I once worked as a planner of a music activity in junior high school, which undoubtedly helped me get rich experience. If elected, I will try my best to do every task well and improve the quality of programs.

Please vote for me. Your support will be greatly appreciated. Thanks!

Then the idea came to me: I could appeal to my fellow divers to take action. I reached out to the local divers, who immediately started supporting me. The following months saw us collecting pieces of plastic that we saw floating past and putting them in the pocket of our diving suits. If we were walking along the beach, we made sure to collect all the plastic that we saw on the sand. The effects were noticeable almost immediately. I could see the beach returning to its original beauty. However, I knew that these individual actions weren't enough to stop the plastic pollution crisis unless companies stopped producing so much plastic in the first place.

I decided to take it a step further to try and stop those companies producing single-use plastics. One way in particular stood out because it was easy to implement, yet its effects would be far reaching. Whenever I found a piece of branded plastic waste in the ocean, on a river bank or beach, I took a picture of it and posted it to social media, tagged the brand, and used the hashtag IsThisYours? Since I started this approach, I have reached out to a dozen companies in this way and got more and more followers. We may be limited in what we can do, but I believe that a single spark can start a prairie fire.

M: OK. So, what should I do if I'm still in pain after Wednesday?

W: You can take normal painkillers from the chemist(药剂师).

M: OK, thanks. I'll ask my mom to get some on the drive home.
