Dear Chris,

I hope this email finds you well. I'm writing to congratulate you on winning the first prize in the "Beautiful China in My Eyes" short video competition!

Your video really stood out. It not only captured the essence of China, from its breathtaking natural scenery to its rich cultural heritage, but also blended the traditional and modern aspects of life here. Besides, your impressive use of camera angles, lighting, and composition creates a visually stunning experience that transports viewers to the heart of China.

Once again, congratulations on this well-deserved win! I am looking forward to seeing more of your creative works in the future.

Yours,
Li Hua

第二节 (满分 25 分)

At lunch time, he sat alone and poked at the food in his lunchbox. I took a deep breath, gathered my courage and made my way over to his table. "Hey," I said softly, trying not to startle him, "I saw your drawing during the art class. It's really amazing!" He looked up at me, surprise flickering in his eyes, then a small smile touched the corners of his mouth. "Thanks," he mumbled, his voice barely above a whisper. I pulled out the chair next to him and sat down, placing my own lunchbox on the table.

In my lunchbox was a beautiful, bright orange from Mr. Xu's garden. I gently picked up the fresh fruit, carefully peeled it, and handed to him a section. He hesitated for a moment, then accepted it and took a small bite. "Thank you, I didn't expect such a treat today," he said, his voice filled with genuine appreciation. "Mei guanxi!" I chuckled, feeling a sense of accomplishment. It was amazing how something as simple as an orange could bring people together and spark such joy and delight. And I knew I would always treasure this delightful moment, thanks to Mr. Xu and his juicy fruit.
